Legend & Templates

Legend

Elements seen throughout these wireframes are explained below.

Page “Fold” / Viewable Area

Illustrated version

Page Breaks

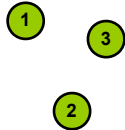

Illustrates a break in the wireframe to save vertical space in this document.

Annotations

Annotations are denoted by a numbered circle, for which the explanation will be located in the Annotation area to the right of the respective wireframe.

In some cases, the annotations will reside below a wireframe; such will likely be the case with illustrated states that are pulled out of a wireframe on their own.

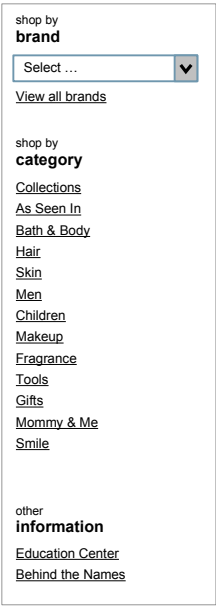

Templates / Abbreviated Illustrations

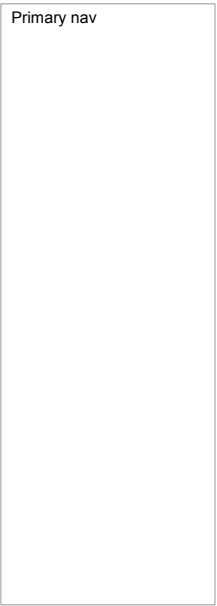

Abbreviated illustrations are used for simplification of wireframe development and presentations. They also ensure that both clients and developers understand exactly what will go into a space, without distracting from the intention of each wireframe.

1. The user can change the order by which results are displayed in the result set. While the specific ordering methods available for result set may be different, they will generally be:

Name, A-Z / vice versa

Brand, A-Z / vice versa

Price, Low-Hight / vice versa

1a. Illustration of the above options.

2. The user can choose the number of items they'd like to display on any one page. The default upon session start is 12, but changing this will reset the default for the duration of the session. Values can include: 12, 16, 20 and 24.

2a. If "view all" is selected, all items in the result set will be displayed on one page, and pagination controls will be hidden.

3. The user can click any of the page numbers to jump directly to that page Clicking the right arrow will move to the next page; clicking the left arrow will move to the previous page.

3a. Page numbers and arrows are always repeated at the bottom of a result set.

Error Messaging & Placement

Displaying Error Messages

Errors are either user-induced, through bad data that’s sent to the server, or server-induced, wherein something on the back-end doesn’t go as expected. This document doesn’t describe every possible error that can take place, as that is something that should be handled by the vendor.

1. In forms, the formatting of data should be checked using client-side code before it is submitted to the server for processing. This reduces the amount of time the user must spend waiting for what will be an invalid submission, and also reduces the number of transactions with the server.

2. Errors will be displayed to the user above the form in which the respective errors occurred. They are told there were errors, and each one is listed in order. The respective fields are also highlighted using CSS so the user can easily see which fields require correction.

-  The following errors need to be corrected:
1. Field Name: error message and supportive text.
 2. Field Name: error message and supportive text.
